

NextiraOne France builds special video surveillance system for Marseille Regional Transport (RTM)

Paris – 20 August, 2007. NextiraOne, Europe’s leading experts in communications services, today announced that it has built an internet protocol (IP) CCTV network for Marseille Regional Transport (RTM) which will further improve passenger security and reduce overheads. The new network replaces the existing analogue system and will also simplify the administration of transport network surveillance through centralised management.

RTM manages two underground lines, 78 bus routes and a new tram network, which opens this summer. The network is travelled by 250,000 customers each day. The company selected NextiraOne to implement an IP video surveillance system, the first upgrade to the network since 1984, and required a network that would enable the Police to easily retrieve important data and video information.

To achieve this, NextiraOne deployed VisioWave Evolution HD technology to control the following; 690 cameras, software, movement detectors, management and data, which is stored on a Cisco local area network (LAN). Managers can select cameras from across the network and take advantage of image processing technologies to detect suspect packages. IPCCTV improves the storage and monitoring capabilities of traditional surveillance systems as it eradicates the need to keep thousands of tapes and means that data can be managed and retrieved on a PC.

“As Marseille’s transport network evolves and grows, so do the challenges of managing it and keeping its customers safe,” said Neil Moss, Marketing and Strategy Director for NextiraOne Europe. “NextiraOne has a renowned pedigree for deploying cutting-edge surveillance systems for many transport networks across Europe, so we look forward to continuing our relationship with RTM to further improve its network security and management.”
